Concrete that uses chunks or beads of expanded polystyrene (EPS) foam as aggregate has lots of interesting applications. It's lighter, for one, so if you're casting something intended to be portable (like Halloween yard tombstones) "EPScrete" can save you some lifting and groaning. It would also be expected to have better thermal insulation properties than plain-jane concrete, and of course there's the green angle: EPS is tough to recycle, and any that gets cast into concrete ...
